for All South Africans

The Democratic Metaphoric Bird

A democracy is like a bird: it needs its LEFT wing and its RIGHT wing, or it cannot fly.

- The Left Wing works mostly on the selling side — the arts, retail, wholesale, trading, marketing etc.
- The Right Wing works mostly with manufacturing and service delivery — the sport and security side of the economy.

During apartheid the right wing worked and the left wing failed due to imperialist right wing domination and sanctions. South Africa could not trade internationally. Today the left wing works and the right wing fails, due to imperialist left wing domination. Factories are closing. Service delivery and security are failing. Unemployment is a problem. FPSA is the only party working to get BOTH wings working.

Key Policies

- Self-determination for left, middle and right, within the limitations of the SA Constitution — not one-size-fits-all rule from the centre.
- A small central government focussing only on what truly unites us: deterring crime with good national defence. Universal agreement happens mostly about what most agree not to do.
- Decentralised regions, each free to govern according to its own culture. Particular agreement happens mostly about cultural doing, whilst respecting the universal agreement about not-doing. Division based on colour is not acceptable. Multicultural left wing regions must function as well.
- Grow local capital and local currencies instead of relying on foreign debt.

A big problem in South African politics up to date has been imperialist domination by either the right wing or the left wing. When that happens the other wing cannot function. A bird cannot fly with one wing. Imperialism is disrespect of others' self-determination. Self-determination is respect for others' self-determination. The left, middle and right must respect each others' regional self-determination. Other countries which have achieved this are the USA and Switzerland, after civil wars between the wings. The big central government in the USA, dominated by one wing, though, is a remnant of imperialism. South Africa can do better than that, by having a small central government focusing only on universal matters. During 1991 to 1994 all South Africans showed we can do better whilst avoiding catastrophe.

The two forms of the Golden Rule and its logic of reciprocity must be taught to all South Africans. FPSA will do that. The universal form is not-doing evil to all others like selves do not want evil done to. Most people have heard about this in the Christian sense of "love thy enemy", but most people have not been taught that it means primarily respect of criminal law and use of social services when necessary. An evil can be not-done to the whole world therefore this form is universal. The particular form is doing good to others like selves want good done to. Most people have heard about this in the Christian sense of "love thy neighbour". Good cannot be done to the whole world, therefore this is particular love. When the universal form gets broken for profit, to comply with the particular form, wealth is not created and large populations cannot be sustained. China and India were united with comprehension of the universal form of reciprocity, via i.e. Confucianism and Buddhism. Western Europe is an example where Christianity had an important influence on unity.

Politics is moving from imperialism to self-determination in the long term. Crime and imperialism take away others' self-determination. Thousands and hundreds of years ago kingdoms ruled. They did not respect, with cross-border crimes, the universal form of the Golden Rule. Therefore democracy started developing. About 2500 years ago the universal form of the Golden Rule started spreading across borders and among tribes/families in China and Nepal/India, with for example, Confucius and Buddha. Jesus of Nazareth spread a similar message in the Middle East. The universal form of the Golden Rule, which requires respect for criminal law, is still expanding. The International Criminal Court, for example, is enforcing it.

Another important moral, which needs to be taught is respect for the idea Truth. The idea manifests with correspondence between communication and reality. Without truth being respected the necessary coherence, technological progress and maintenance, which sustain large populations, fail. True puzzles in minds are formed from true puzzle pieces in minds. False puzzle pieces in minds limit the building of mind puzzles, which help sustain large populations.

These ideas must be respected against idolatry/messianism, because when the reasoning is that, for example, "only god is honest", crime and imperialism make South Africa fail. Caiaphas Syndrome, manifesting with crime and imperialism hinder sustainability of large populations, therefore South Africa needs a serious political and moral change.
